Comdata Corp., a company that handles credit card payments and taxes for trucking companies, said Monday that it would add about 120 new jobs to its Brentwood headquarters to handle growth.

The new employees will support the company's regulatory compliance division, which handles back-office chores such as filing fuel tax returns and seeking oversize load permits for trucking companies.

"It's not a new area for us," said Trisha Torrado, director of marketing for Comdata. "It's just an area we're putting more attention on. It's what customers want. If they can turn to us, that's one less thing they need to worry about."

The news follows the March announcement that a competitor, Fleet One LLC of Nashville, would add 49 jobs in Middle Tennessee. The region has several payment processing and fuel card companies.

Comdata's Tracey Power said jobs would range from entry-level to management.

Comdata human resources manager Tracey Power said the jobs ranged from entry-level customer service representatives to managers, information technology positions and auditors. She declined to disclose pay levels.

Comdata already employs about 850 workers out of its Brentwood corporate office and more than 1,000 total in the United States and Canada.

The company sells fuel cards to the trucking and aviation industries, among others, and helps manage and track spending by clients. Comdata handles about $23 billion in card payment transactions a year. It also sells point-of-sale systems to gas stations.

The company said interested job applicants could apply online at www.comdata.com.
